

NORTH CAROLINA.

The mad dog panic is still raging in several parts of the State.

Knap of Reeds, Granville county, has a lodge of Good Templars.

Prof. A. Gray, of Cambridge, Mass., was in Wilmington on Wednesday.

Many fences have been destroyed in Edgecombe county by fire in the woods.

Mrs. J. H. Bugbee, of Providence, R. I., died in Charlotte on Wednesday.

The Republicans of Tarboro have nominated A. McCabe for re-election as Mayor.

Col. H. C. Jones, of Charlotte, delivers the memorial address in Morganton on the 10th prox.

A colored boy, 6 years of age, was drowned the other day in Sandy Hook, near Henderson.

Large and destructive fires in the woods have swept through portions of Jones and Carteret counties.

Tar river has got so low that steamers have failed for the past week to make trips between Tarboro and Washington.

Granville county votes on the 1st Thursday in August upon the proposition to subscribe to the proposed Granville Railroad.

At the recent session of the Beaufort county Superior Court, Arden Nelson and Osborn Williams were sentenced to the Penitentiary. The first for two years, the latter for eight.

Two young men by the name of Pittman, of Johnson county, were arrested on the 14th inst., under a charge of having committed rape upon some colored girls. The parties were bound over in a bond of $200 each.

Mr. J. H. Saville, Chief Clerk of the U. S. Treasury Department, is in Wilmington investigating the Custom House there. According to the Journal the Custom House there has 16 employees and costs the government $20,000 per year.

Daniel Nixon and Wesley Nixon, both colored employees on the Wilmington & Weldon Railroad, got into a quarrel at Tarboro last Monday night over the arrangement of their pallet, when Wesley smashed Daniel over the head with a billet of wood, fracturing his skull. The doctors think that the injured man can't get well.

In the bill to establish post roads which passed Congress March 3d, (the day before adjournment) we find the following post roads established for the eastern part of North Carolina, viz:

From Kenansville to Kinston, by which a gentleman, formerly of this city and Colonel of a Confederate regiment during the war, slipped into possession of a beautiful young bride and a big pile of greenbacks, at the same time, was the absorbing topic of conversation yesterday.

Captain John Pounce and Lieut. N. Stodder arrived in Wilmington on Wednesday for the purpose of locating line survey stations between Cape Henry and Cape Fear. They have already fixed upon the following places on the North Carolina coast, distant from each other 10 miles, and at the most exposed points, viz: Cape Henry; Dan Neck Mills; False Cape; Jones Hill; Casses Inlet; Kitty Hawk; Beach; New Head; Body Island; North End; Chickamaucum Beach; Kennebec Beach.

The Goldsboro Messenger of the 17th inst. says our readers doubtless remember the mysterious death, about two years ago, of a white woman named Elizabeth Cole, residing near Smithfield, under circumstances which conclusively showed that she had been murdered. Up to the present time not the slightest clue to identity of the murderer has been obtained, and probably never will be.

But three or four days ago, considerable excitement was created by one W. D. Stodder, declaring that B. F. Adams was the murderer, and that witnesses, whose names he gave, were prepared to testify against him. Accordingly the authorities took the matter in hand, and immediately issued subpoenas for the witnesses whose names had been furnished by Stodder. They were separately subjected to a rigid examination, and each and all declared their entire ignorance of the transaction.

The course of true love.

That the course of true love is still a little rough, the following paragraph in the Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer, of a recent date, bears witness.

"A party started for Weldon to get married, and went as far as the Appomattox depot together, but the bridegroom suddenly remembered that he needed a pair of gloves for the interesting ceremony. So leaving his fair one in the cars, he hurried off to get the gloves; but railroad trains are like time and tide in the particular of waiting for people, and away the train went to Weldon with the bride elect, and left the groom here. When her ticket was wanted, she was minus, and the hard-hearted conductor put her off, as she had no business in Weldon by herself, and he had no intention of paying her fare. She remained at Reans station all day in great mental anguish, but when the afternoon train came, it brought her home looking for her. The wedding is said to have been one of joy, and the usual formalities of society were ignored, and regardless of any remarks of Mrs. Grundy, she threw herself on his bosom and wept. They are married now."

Extract from the Telegraph and Messenger, Micon, Ga.: "We had tested the virtues of penny, and have found it to be the best medicine the world ever saw. We had tried forty other remedies before the Sarsaparilla Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief, until the Regulator not only relieved, but cured us."

ROBERT E. LEE.

A Review of Gen. Pendleton's Lecture on the Great Chief.

Gen. Pendleton, Chief of Artillery of the Confederate States Army, and a warm personal friend of Gen. R. E. Lee, who is now engaged in traveling through the Southern States in behalf of the Lee Church at Lexington, Va., is delivering his lecture upon the great chief at various points in the South. It will be remembered that he was prevented from delivering it in Raleigh by inclement weather. The Mobile Register, of the 15th inst., gives the following interesting sketch of the lecture:

"It would be unjust to Gen. Pendleton and to his great theme to attempt to record with detail his interesting lecture before the Franklin Society last night, in the time and in the limits the hour allows. We can barely give a brief outline—the thread, as it were, upon which the pearls of reminiscence and of morals were strung. Commencing with those days when he was the chosen companion of Lee at West Point, Gen. Pendleton paid high tribute to those qualities, both of head and heart, which were later so wondrously developed. Passing to the Mexican war, he showed by examples therein their high and most practical developments; illustrating by two anecdotes of the young Captain of Engineers. One of these gave him credit for the great results of Cerro Gordo, where alone he reconnoitered the field the night before, and gained information that opened successfully that 'Way of Death,' the other when through a blinding storm at dead of night the young engineer made the perilous passage of the Pedregal and carried an army to the front of Contreras. Passing rapidly over the long interval, Gen. Pendleton feelingly described those days when he first met the now Col. Lee, come to offer his sword and his honor to his native State. He described at length the great efforts made by Mr. Lincoln and Montgomery Blair, and the glittering future in command of the United States troops, by them offered to induce the Virginian to prove recreant to his own unconquerable sense of duty and of truth. How these efforts proved fruitless, we know; the wherefore General Pendleton explained. Next we had a glimpse of Lee's style of grasping and of utilizing the small means at his command; we followed him through the red fields around Richmond, Fredericksburg, Antietam, on the Gettysburg, we sorrowed for the loss of the immortal Jackson, and keenly felt his want upon that fatal day when the great chance of Southern liberty faded from the sight of a hopeful nation behind the dark and lowering clouds of the last battle—General Pendleton here gave brief but forcible arraignment of James Longstreet, that tireless fighter and proven hard-hitter, to whose delay he attributed that lost opportunity. Gen. Pendleton stated that to his personal knowledge, derived from Gen. Lee's own lips, Longstreet had the night before received from Gen. Lee in person orders to advance at the dawn of the next morning; that he (Gen. Pendleton) and mad a reconnaissance in person, and secured to Gen. Lee the perfect practicability of an immediate assault upon the then unprepared enemy; how he had waited impatiently until 12 o'clock; how Longstreet, at that hour rode up to his side, and sat upon his horse useless and inactive until 4 o'clock, p. m. Then, the dead of his column did go in, the prodigies of valor they performed were futile against the now massed and concentrated enemy. And still Robert E. Lee (Gen. Pendleton said) refused to lay the blame upon the shoulders of the man who had fought so often and so well for him. Passing rapidly through the darkening scene of the closing months of the war, the lecturer pictured Gen. Lee in those days of storm and stress, when the destinies of his now conquered people were upheld by his firm hand alone. And then we saw him—after all that waste of blood, of sorrow and of hope—in those elating hours of the awful drama when the dying liberties of a nation gave up the ghost. It would be a rare privilege were we able to give verbatim the grand story the speaker told, and to quote the noblest utterances of the noblest of the war, the lecturer realized that his grand hour had been in vain; that the conquered banner must be 'now buried forever.' In no scenes of victory, of endeavor, or of defeat grandly sustained, does the Great Chief stand so clearly out from the gloomy picture of our past, laid panoplied in his true manhood and clothed in the white vestments of his pure patriotism. Touching alluding to the quiet but not less noble scenes, in which the hero of war proved himself a true and devoted husband, a true and devoted father, and then pastor stood with us by that death bed at which a sorrowing nation bowed its head. Suffice it to say that the description given by the warrior Priest of that supreme moment was as nearly worthy of the scene as simple words might be. Fit finale to the glorious life was the death of him who 'While his country staggers'neath the Cross, He rises with the Crown.'"

CHARLES HOMAN'S

SUMMER GARDEN,

(Near Camp Russell.)

Simms' Dog.

BY MAX ADLER.

We did not want to take Simms' dog home for him; but Simms insisted upon it. He wanted to go somewhere to meet a man and so he placed one end of the chain in our hand, and before we had time to remonstrate, so, as it was absolutely necessary to do something with the dog, we concluded that it would be better to do as Simms suggested, and take him home. He was a large dog, and his temper was not of angelic sweetness. When we started home with him, he seemed disinclined to go. He appeared to restrain a preference for lying down and thinking—probably about the succulence and juiciness of the bites he had taken out of human legs during his career. When we pulled at the chain he shook up the hair on his spine and showed his teeth. When we attempted to drag him along by force, he flew at our legs and attempted to help himself to a mouthful, so that he could in future have another cheerful recollection upon which to muse and ponder. We dodged and seized a cane, one end of which was inserted in his collar, so that he could be kept at a respectable distance. Then he was suddenly seized with an intense yearning to reach Simms' house at once, and he started with a jump. For three or four hundred yards the procession went on smoothly enough; but we should, perhaps, have gone more rapidly towards Simms' if the dog had not been possessed of an irresistible desire to be sociable with every other dog that came within a square of him.

Once Simms' dog obtained too much sociability. There was a bigger dog, which seemed more anxious to commune with Simms' dog than the latter with him. The brief interview ended with a fight. We were as we began to cross the fence he made such a savage demonstration at us that we thought it would be a suicide to get down among him. We determined to remain where we were. But Simms' animal was animated by aggressive zeal. If we would not go to him he would go to us. So he began to crawl through the fence at the panel through which his chain went. Just as he completed the task we adjourned with singular promptness to the other side. Simms' dog looked surprised and grieved, but he emitted a savage growl and began to crawl back again. It seemed strange if considerations of a strictly personal, but very urgent nature required that we should return to the previous side of the fence; and when we did, Simms' dog seemed to regard it as a sacred duty to climb back at once. We like a dog to have perseverance and determination, and Simms' dog had. As these gymnastics were fast becoming monotonous, we began to vary them, so we let the dog go and repaired to a neighboring tree. As soon as the dog arrived he heaved upward for awhile and drank in the scene. Then he seemed satisfied, and lay down at the foot of the tree to wait till we descended. He stayed there four hours and so did we. We couldn't desert such a faithful dog as that. At the end of that time Simms hove in sight, and, standing there beneath the outspreading branches of that noble old monarch of the forest, turned his face upward and abused us scurrilously for not bringing home his dog, as we had promised to do, intimating at the same time his belief that we cherished an intention to steal the brute. We should have dropped on Simms' head and crushed him to the earth, if his dog hadn't been there. As it was, we overlooked the insult, and he went home with his menagerie. The next time we have a dog to take home we shall kill him before we start.
